

LESLIE A. CORDIE, PHD, MBA

Dr. Leslie Cordie is an Associate Professor in the Adult Education program at Auburn University. She has over 25 years combined experiences in higher education, government and military, and corporate America. Her background includes distance learning, adult education, training, instructional design, program and professional development, and healthcare. Before this faculty position, she was in the College of Agriculture where she was the Distance Learning Coordinator for several years.

Dr. Cordie has a PhD in Adult Education and Technical Communication from Colorado State University which includes an emphasis in Distance Learning, adult learning theory, online information, and instructional design and curriculum development. She also has a MBA from the University of TX at Austin, and has experience working with the airlines and the military in quality and performance improvement.

Prior to coming back to Auburn in 2012, she was the Chief Curriculum Coordinator at Air University at Maxwell Air Force Base in Montgomery, Alabama. She was responsible for the oversight of curricula in professional continuing education and professional military education for 11 schools at 5 centers headquartered at Maxwell, and three satellite campuses across the US; AND included through distance learning programs available at bases around the world.